The New York Times Lovers, Prospectors and Predators by David Brooks

The world seems full of sexual predators these days. But I don't think good men wake up one morning and suddenly start thrusting their tongue down the throats of women they barely know. You've got to walk through a certain number of doors before you're capable of that kind of behavior.

Dating violence associated with nonmedical use of prescription drugs

Researchers have found links between teen dating violence and nonmedical use of prescription drugs.

However, males and females experience this violence differently, according to the study "Physical and Sexual Dating Violence and Nonmedical Use of Prescription Drugs." ### Age of First Marriage > Age of First Birth

Over the past 35 years, the median age at women's first marriage has surpassed the median age at first birth. In the newest Family Profile, Crossover in the Median Age at First Marriage and First Birth: Thirty-Five Years of Change \(FP-17-22\), we document the trends in women's age at first marriage and first birth using recent Current Population Survey (CPS) and Center for Disease Control (CDC) National Vital Statistics. The median age at women's first marriage remains higher than the median age at first birth, and the share of births to unmarried women remains constant at 40%, signaling the decoupling of marriage and childbearing and the delay in both marriage and childbirth.

SECOND WEDNESDAY WEBINAR

Podcast from Freakonomics Radio: The Fracking Boom, a Baby Boom, and the Retreat From Marriage.

We invite you to listen to the following podcast as it clearly lays out the argument for marriage as a values vs. economic decision.

More than 40 percent of U.S. births are to unmarried mothers, and the numbers are especially high among the less-educated. Why? One argument is that the decline in good manufacturing jobs led to a decline in "marriageable" men. Surely the fracking boom reversed that trend, right?

Presenter: Stephen J. Dubner, Host, Freakonomics Radio, and Melissa Kearney: Professor in the Department of Economics at the University of Maryland

Who Should Attend: Healthy marriage and relationship professionals, violence prevention staff, middle and high school health and Family and Consumer Sciences teachers, counselors, college student affairs personnel, parents, and anyone who works with and cares about young people.

When: December 2017, anytime

Cost: Free!

Recognizing that school-centered health intersects with many areas outside of education-housing, employment, transportation, and food access- as well as many audiences, we're looking for efforts that serve as a hub for cross-sector collaboration, youth and community engagement, and broader policy and systemic change.
